Offer of Ownership

Presented to

Desiree Ramos

A proposal for a thirty-five percent (35%) ownership interest in Magnolia Maids

August 16, 2026 · Prepared by Cody Forbes, Founder

CONFIDENTIAL — FOR THE NAMED RECIPIENT ONLY

A NOTE FROM THE FOUNDER

Desiree — I want you to build this with me.

Dear Desiree,

Magnolia Maids is being built on a simple promise: that a home in Durant should be cared for the way you'd care for your own. Keeping that promise has never been a one-person job, and it never will be. It lives in who answers the phone, who follows up on a quote, who makes sure the right crew shows up at the right house at the right hour — and that is the person I want at the front of this company.

You are joining us as an outstanding new addition. You will be the voice our customers hear first, the one who holds the schedule together, smooths over the days that go sideways, and carries the standard when no one is watching. That is not assistant work. That is ownership work — and I want the person doing it to own a real piece of what she's building from day one.

So I'd like to make you a partner immediately. This document is my formal offer of a thirty-five percent (35%) ownership interest in Magnolia Maids, granted to you outright — no purchase price, no vesting clock, nothing to buy in with. You are not being asked to earn it backward; you are being trusted with it forward because of who you are and what this role will become in your hands.

What follows lays out the role, exactly what the 35% means, how money will work as revenue comes in, and what each of us is committing to. I've written it plainly on purpose. I'd rather we both understand every line now than discover a misunderstanding a year from now.

If you say yes, I'll be building the rest of this company with a partner instead of alone. That's what I want.

With genuine respect,

Cody Forbes

Founder, Magnolia Maids · Durant, Oklahoma

SECTION 1

The role you'd be stepping into

Title: Co-Owner & Director of Client Experience and Operations

Location: Remote, with flexibility around the hours our clients actually call — Monday through Friday, 8:00 AM to 5:00 PM CST.

This role is the front door and the nerve center of the business at the same time. In practice it covers:

- Answering the phone. Every inbound call from a prospective or current client, handled with the warmth and competence that makes people choose us over a national chain.
- Quotes and follow-up. Turning inquiries into booked work — walking clients through pricing, sending the quote, and following up so nothing goes cold.
- Scheduling and coordination. Building the calendar, matching crews to homes, handling reschedules, and keeping arrival windows honest.
- Crew communication. Making sure the team knows where they're going, what the home needs, and what the client expects before they arrive.
- Client retention. Checking in after service, resolving issues before they become reviews, and turning one-time cleans into recurring clients.
- Working alongside Maggie. Using the admin dashboard, automated follow-ups, and the Maggie assistant to handle volume — with your judgment as the override on anything that matters.

> What this role is not
>
> This is not a script-reading call center seat. You will have real authority over how we schedule, how we recover a bad visit, and how we talk to our clients. When you make a call in the moment, it stands.

SECTION 2

The offer

Magnolia Maids offers Desiree Ramos a thirty-five percent (35%) ownership interest in the business, on the following terms:

Ownership stake	Thirty-five percent (35%) of the total membership interest in Magnolia Maids.
Retained by founder	Sixty-five percent (65%), held by Cody Forbes.
Purchase price	None. This interest is granted outright, in recognition of the value you will bring to the business and the role you are accepting.
Capital contribution	None required. You are not being asked to invest money in the business.
Vesting	None. The interest is not subject to a vesting schedule, cliff, or earn-back provision.
Effective date	The date this proposal is countersigned by both parties, or such date as the operating agreement specifies. [confirm date]
Entity	[Legal entity name and structure to be confirmed — e.g. Magnolia Maids, LLC, an Oklahoma limited liability company]
Dilution	Neither owner's percentage changes unless both owners agree in writing to admit a new member or issue additional interest.

Plain-language version

You own a little more than a third of this company. You did not have to pay for it, you cannot lose it by missing a milestone, and nobody can water it down without your written agreement.

SECTION 3

What 35% actually means day to day

A percentage on paper is only worth what it entitles you to. Here is the substance behind the number.

Profit distributions

Once Magnolia Maids is generating revenue and profitable after expenses and owner salaries, profits available for distribution are split 65% to Cody, 35% to you. Distributions are declared jointly and on the same schedule for both owners — no one takes money out ahead of the other.

A voice in how the business runs

- Hiring and letting go. No cleaner joins or leaves the team without your input.
- Pricing and service offerings. Rate changes, new service types, and promotional pricing are decided together.
- Service standards. You co-own what "a Magnolia Maids clean" means and what we refuse to compromise on.
- Marketing and brand. How we present ourselves publicly is a shared decision.
- Major commitments. Any contract, lease, loan, or purchase representing a significant obligation requires both owners' agreement.

Transparency

You get full and continuous access to the financials — revenue, expenses, payroll, and the books — not a summary once a quarter. Ownership without visibility isn't ownership.

Where the founder holds the final call

As the 65% owner, Cody retains the deciding vote if the two of us reach a genuine deadlock on a day-to-day operating matter. That is a tiebreaker of last resort, not a way of working. The decisions listed above are intended to be made jointly, and the formal operating agreement will spell out which matters require unanimous consent.

SECTION 4

How money will work

I'm not going to promise you a salary the business can't pay yet. Here's the honest sequence.

Today: no salary for either owner

Magnolia Maids is early. Neither owner is drawing a salary right now, and this offer does not create one. You are not being asked to work unpaid indefinitely — you are being made an owner of what the work builds.

As revenue comes online: defined salaries

Once the business is generating consistent revenue, we establish written salaries for both owners based on the role each of us performs. Those salaries are set jointly, reviewed at least annually, and treated as an operating expense — meaning they are paid before any profit distribution is calculated.

After salaries: profit distributions

Whatever profit remains after expenses and owner salaries is distributed 65/35 as described in Section 3, on a schedule the two of us agree on.

Stage 1 — Today	No salary for either owner. Revenue is reinvested into growth: marketing, equipment, supplies, and crew pay.
Stage 2 — Revenue	Written salaries established for both owners, sized to the role and what the business can genuinely support.
Stage 3 — Profit	Remaining profit distributed 65% / 35% on a jointly agreed schedule.

Said plainly

Early on, money that comes in goes back into the business. That is a choice we make together, not one imposed on you — and once there is enough coming in to pay ourselves, we both get paid before either of us takes a distribution.

SECTION 5

What ownership asks of you in return

An honest offer includes the obligations, not just the upside. In accepting this interest, each owner commits to the following.

Good-faith commitment to the role

You'll give the business the consistent time and attention the operations role requires, and let your partner know in advance when life makes that impossible for a stretch. The specific expectation is availability during business hours, not a punch clock.

Shared accountability for service quality

Both owners are answerable for what a client experiences. When something goes wrong, we fix it and we tell each other — no quiet problems.

Confidentiality

Client lists, pricing, financials, crew information, and business processes stay inside the business, during and after any period of ownership.

Non-solicitation

Neither owner will solicit Magnolia Maids clients or crew for a competing cleaning business, during ownership and for a reasonable period afterward. [Duration and scope to be defined in the operating agreement — commonly 12 to 24 months.]

Loyalty to the business

Neither owner will operate or take an ownership stake in a competing residential cleaning service in our market while an owner here.

Decisions in writing

Anything that changes ownership, salaries, distributions, or major obligations gets recorded in writing and signed by both owners. Handshakes are how partnerships start and how they fall apart.

SECTION 6

If either of us steps away

The best time to answer the hard question is before it's an emotional one. This section is a framework of intent; the binding mechanics belong in the operating agreement.

If you choose to leave

You give reasonable written notice — a target of sixty (60) days so the operations role can be transitioned without hurting our clients. The business (or Cody personally) has the first right to purchase your 35% interest at fair market value, determined in good faith and, if we can't agree, by a neutral third-party valuation whose cost we split. Payment may be made over a reasonable period rather than in a lump sum, so a buyout doesn't sink the company.

If Cody exits or sells

You will not be left behind in a sale. If the business or the majority interest is sold, you have tag-along rights — the right to sell your 35% on the same per-percentage terms, at the same time, as the majority owner.

If either owner becomes unable to serve

In the event of extended incapacity or death, the interest passes according to the operating agreement's transfer provisions, with the surviving owner holding a right of first refusal before any interest transfers to an outside party.

No forced forfeiture

Your ownership interest cannot be stripped from you for underperformance, disagreement, or a change of heart. It can only change hands through a voluntary sale, a mutually agreed buyout, or the transfer provisions we both sign.

> Why this section exists
>
> Not because I expect either of us to leave — because a partnership that has already answered this question is a stronger one than a partnership that hopes it never comes up.

Status	A proposal of intent. A formal operating agreement, reviewed by an Oklahoma attorney, will control.

NEXT STEPS

Where we go from here

- Read it, then push back. Anything in here that doesn't sit right with you is negotiable. I'd rather rewrite a section than have you sign something you're unsure about.
- Talk it through. Let's sit with it together and answer every question before either of us signs anything.
- Sign this proposal. Countersigning below records our shared intent and the terms we've agreed to.
- Make it official. An Oklahoma business attorney drafts the operating agreement reflecting these terms, we both review it, and we file whatever the state requires.
- Get your name on everything. Bank accounts, insurance, vendor accounts, and public materials updated to reflect two owners.

Please read this part carefully

This document is a good-faith proposal and statement of intent. It is not a binding operating agreement, and it is not legal or tax advice. The definitive terms of ownership will be set out in a formal operating agreement prepared and reviewed by a licensed Oklahoma attorney, and both parties are encouraged to obtain independent legal and tax counsel before signing that agreement.
